Introduction

The purpose of the subject index is to enable the reader to obtain the names and references of cases on a particular topic. The arrangement of the index follows the conventional pattern of legal indexes, being based on an alphabetical sequence of main headings each of which is subdivided into further sub-headings, also arranged in alphabetical sequence, covering topics which fall within the generality of the main heading. For every entry, other than cross-reference entries, the process of sub-division has been taken two stages further. Thus each entry has been classified under a main index heading and three further subheadings in descending order of generality. If superior headings have not already done so, the third level of sub-heading should identify with sufficient particularity the entries relevant to the particular topic on which the reader is seeking authority.

For example, a reader who is searching for cases on mistake as to the ownership of goods in relation to a change of theft under the modern law, should refer to the general heading 'CRIMINAL LAW'. He will there find some 1400 entries listed under that heading. Almost all of those cases will clearly be irrelevant to the point on which the reader is seeking authority. The next step, therefore, is to turn to the sub-heading 'Theft' under the general heading 'CRIMINAL LAW'. He will there find some 20 entries listed under that sub-heading; again most of these entries are likely to be irrelevant. The search may however be taken two stages further by turning to the 'sub-sub-heading', 'Property belonging to another', which covers seven entries and the further sub-heading 'Mistake' under the sub-sub-heading 'Property belonging to another' which will reveal two entries expressly on the topic on which authority is being sought.

The different levels of heading and sub-heading are indicated typographically thus:

CRIMINAL LAW

Theft—

Property belonging to another—

Mistake—

The main heading and first two levels of sub-headings are not repeated for every entry to which they relate but only for the first relevant entry and, for convenience, at the top of each new page.

It will not usually be necessary to proceed to the third level of sub-heading to identify relevant cases with sufficient particularity. Thus, a reference to the sub-heading 'Treason' under the main heading 'CRIMINAL LAW' will reveal that there is only one case on that topic.

In most cases main entries, ie entries other than cross-reference entries, do not conclude with the third level of sub-heading but continue with sufficient 'catchphrases' to indicate the salient facts of the case referred to and the point of law on which the case is authority. Main entries conclude with the name of the case which is being referred to and its citation.

In searching for entries on a particular topic, the reader will not always choose the same words or phrase, or start with the same generality of heading, as that used in the index. For this reason the index has been fully cross-referenced. Thus a reader searching for cases on theft who looks up the main entry 'THEFT' will find a cross-reference stating: 'See Criminal law (Theft)' indicating that he should refer to the sub-heading 'Theft' under the main entry 'CRIMINAL LAW'.

Cross-reference entries fall into two categories: (i) cross-references from one main heading to another main heading ('external cross-references'), and (ii) cross-references within the limits of a particular main heading ('internal cross-references'). All cross-references of either variety begin with the word 'See' in italic type.

(i) In external cross-reference the word 'See' is followed by a word or phrase in bold type followed, where appropriate, by further words or phrases within brackets. The word or phrase in bold type denotes the main heading which is being referred to and the words in brackets the sub-headings under that main heading to which reference should be made in order to locate the entries on the topic in question. The following are examples: 'See Auctioneer' means that the reader should refer to all the entries under the main heading 'AUCTIONEER'; 'See Landlord and tenant (Forfeiture of lease—Arrears of rent)' means that the reader should refer to the sub-sub-heading 'Arrears of rent' under the sub-heading 'Forfeiture of lease' under the main heading 'LANDLORD AND TENANT'.

(ii) In internal cross-references there are no words in bold type or brackets. The word 'See' is followed by words or phrases in ordinary Roman type which are in turn followed by the word 'ante' or 'post' in italic type. These indicate the sub-heading and, where appropriate, further sub-headings, which appear under the same main heading as the cross-reference itself. Thus under the main entry 'ARREST' there is a sub-heading 'Constable' followed by a sub-sub-heading 'Arrest without warrant'. This is followed by the cross-reference: 'See Arrest without warrant—Constable, ante'. This indicates that, to locate the relevant entries, the reader should refer to the sub-sub-heading 'Constable' under the sub-heading 'Arrest without warrant' under the same main heading 'ARREST'. Internal cross-references always start with the principal sub-heading under the relevant main heading, even though the cross-reference entry itself also appears under that sub-heading. Thus following the entry:

BANKRUPTCY

Appeal—

Costs—

Security for costs

there is a cross-reference: 'See Appeal—Security for costs, post'. This refers to the entry under the sub-sub-heading 'Security for costs' under the same principal sub-heading 'Appeal'.
